Portuguese Air Force saves U.S. Coast Guardsman at sea

A Portuguese Air Force rescue crew rescued an American patient from the U.S. Coast Guard Cutter "Legare," approximately 93 nautical miles northwest of the Island of Santa Maria, May 25.

The patient, John Flynn, was experiencing respiratory problems and was transported to a civilian hospital in Ponta Delgada. He was diagnosed with acute tonsillitis, treated with antibiotics and placed under medical observation, according to 65th Medical Group officials.

Flynn, who was transported aboard a Puma helicopter, has been in daily contact with 65th Medical Group representatives since his arrival in the Azores.

U.S. Consul to the Azores, Bill Meara, also visited the Coast Guardsman at the Portuguese hospital and contacted relatives to inform them of his condition.

Closures set for Monday

The commissary and all Army and Air Force Exchange Service facilities, except the shoppette, will be closed Monday in observance of a Portuguese holiday. The shoppette will be open from noon-8 p.m.

AEF Center offers new web format

LANGLEY AIR FORCE BASE, Va. (AFPN) — The Air Force's Web-based deployment tool, EAF Online, has been redesigned to give airmen more help with Air Expeditionary Force issues.

The Aerospace Expeditionary Force Center here redesigned the Web site to give users more information, enhanced access and the convenience of a single source for all AEF deployment information. The center is the agency for implementing the Air Force's EAF concept.

"This is a major milestone to provide better service to those deploying," said Lt. Col. Marie Barboza, the AEF Center's project officer for EAF Online.

The new format combines features of the previous AEFC site into a Web "portal" which provides access to various databases and can be customized for each user. The site offers an array of information including deployment checklists, the AEF Commanders' Playbook, lessons learned, and the newest feature, the Commanders' Toolkit.

The major attraction for deployers is the position descriptions with information on the duties, requirements and conditions of specific deployed positions. Users get the information by first registering at the site, which establishes their profile. Future logins will provide information tailored to the user's career field.

The deployment checklist includes training, medical status and other qualifications required for deployment, as well as links to references. Commanders can track training

Dangerous home runs

Question: I recently participated in a softball tournament at the main field near the fitness center. Some home runs get dangerously close to children playing at the park on the other side of the fence. In fact, one struck a vehicle parked in the T-310 parking lot and shattered the back window.

This is dangerous. Balls traveling at this speed could seriously injure or kill a child in a second. During the two-day tournament, we had more than 20 line-drive home runs.

I recommend putting a safety net above the softball field fence to keep the home runs inside the park. Thank you.

Answer: Thanks for calling and bringing a potentially dangerous situation to my attention.

Services and the civil engineers evaluated the situation and will install a netting system that can be raised during games to protect people in the basketball court and playground.

Until then, high compression softballs will not be allowed. This should reduce the risk of long home runs.

Warning signs calling attention to the risk of home run balls will also be posted to raise awareness. In the interim, parents and players need to be especially vigilant to reduce the chance of injury.

Lajes AFN to show Saving Private Ryan

Lawrence Sichter
American Forces Radio and Television Service Broadcast Center

At 8 p.m. Tuesday, the eve of the 57th anniversary of World War II's greatest invasion, Armed Forces Radio and Television Service remembers the heroes of D-Day with the world broadcast premiere of Saving Private Ryan.

Directed by Steven Spielberg and starring Tom Hanks, Saving Private Ryan was hailed by critics and veterans alike for its based-on-fact plot, accurate period dialogue and shockingly accurate recreations of combat. All 169 minutes of Saving Private Ryan will air on AFN with only limited editing for language.

The decision to leave all of the film's war violence and some of its adult dialogue in place comes after lengthy discussion between AFRTS executives, schedulers and the Armed Forces Chaplains Board. The graphic nature of the movie is a major contributor to the film's effectiveness and as a critically acclaimed production.

The decision to edit for language reflects current FCC broadcast guidelines. Air Force audiences will see a TV MA-rated film that completely conforms to stateside network standards.

At 7:30 p.m., there will be a half-hour documentary, Into The Beach, produced as a special supplement to Ryan. The short film contains rare archival footage of World War II, present day interviews with the soldiers who fought at Omaha Beach, and insights from historians.

Americans help in Pico study

Capt. Kristen Skopeck
Public affairs

Portuguese and American scientists will better understand the atmosphere over the Atlantic when the first stage of an environmental project gets underway here May 30.

An American C-130 from the Wisconsin National Guard brought more than 12,000 pounds of atmospheric equipment from the States to Lajes in the first leg of a collaborative study.

Dr. Paulo Fialho of the University of the Azores and Dr. Richard Honrath from Michigan Technical University led the effort to find a way to place atmospheric sensing equipment on the summit of Pico mountain and near the university campus on Terceira.

"The Azores islands provide a unique natural laboratory to study the effects of pollutants on the atmosphere over the North Atlantic Ocean, because the impact of local pollution sources is minimal," said Dr. Fialho, professor of chemical physics.

"There is a strong suspect that aerosol transport from polluted areas in the United States and Canada can have important climatic effects over the North Atlantic region."

The cooperation of the Portuguese Air Force in this project is essential, not only in the hauling of the equipment from Air Base 4 to the island of Pico in a C-130 aircraft, but especially in the placement of the equipment at the top of Pico mountain, which, due to the difficult access to the site and the size of the equipment, is only possible with the use of a Puma Helicopter from Air Base 4, according to Portuguese Air Force Maj. Gen. Caetano Mendes, Azores Air Zone commander.

"The small observatory will not be seen by individuals on the ground and will transmit data back to the university using cell phone technology," said the professor. "Once the equipment is situated, a team of scientists will only need to visit the site about four times a year."

He said all of the equipment is projected to be in place and operational by the end of July, and the project should last approximately two years.

"This project is an excellent example of U.S. and Azorean cooperation in the scientific arena," said Mr. Bill Meara, U.S. Consul to the Azores. "It also serves as another example of how, because of the U.S. presence in the archipelago, U.S. military assets can be put to work in support of Azorean institutions – in this case the University of the Azores."

Professor Fialho said the monitoring station on Terceira wouldn't be much of a problem because it will be near the university and can be checked daily without difficulty. However, putting the equipment on Pico presented a few challenges. "For one thing, the Pico site is difficult to access, which makes it necessary to have stand-alone equipment," he said. "And, because the equipment must be lifted by helicopter it has to be made of aluminum to keep the weight down. Further, we have to run power up to the site by about three kilometers of cable, and the cables have to be made of a special material resistant to goats grazing there."

The professor said his group and the other scientists plan to publish all of the information gathered by the studies in two annual reports and a final report at the conclusion of the project.

requirements of their people.

The Commander's Toolkit upgrade to EAF Online allows commanders to track the deployment status of their unit and people.

Future enhancements will include a training module to track skill level training and a module to track operations tempo. All modules are updated by pulling data from existing Air Force data sources.

"EAF Online is also very beneficial to Air Force Reserve and Air National Guard members," Barboza said.

The position descriptions and the Commanders' Toolkits include information for active duty members as well as Guard and Reserve troops.

The restricted Web site can be accessed via military and government computers at <https://aefcenter.acc.af.mil/>. The AEFC has also added a new public Web site accessible from any computer. It can be accessed through EAF Online or directly at <http://aefc.langley.af.mil>.

Updated daily, the unclassified site allows users to link to EAF/AEF activities, theater information and other key issues.

"As the AEF construct matures, the unclassified Web site provides critical information on how the Air Force conducts business in the 21st century to the general public, family members and news media representatives," Barboza said. "This also allows Air Force people to get certain AEF information from their home computers."

The sites offer "one-stop shopping" for those eligible to deploy and those who want more information about the EAF concept and AEF process.

Servicemembers can also provide feedback through EAF Online.

"It is critical that everyone identified for an AEF should go to EAF Online to obtain the latest information they need for their deployment," Barboza said.

Honor guard keeps mission

Tech. Sgt. Jose Ruiz
Public Affairs

Dressed in ceremonial uniforms, worn by base honor guard teams worldwide, members of the U. S. Forces Azores Honor Guard can be found at almost every major installation event – paying tribute to their nation's flag, military traditions and their fallen comrades, proudly performing their mission – “to honor with dignity.”

“This is an all-volunteer organization,” said 2nd Lt. David Case, the team's leader. “They train an average of 10 hours a week to enhance their skills when performing time-honored traditional ceremonies for the Lajes community.”

The team is composed of members from various organizations and services throughout the base, who sign up for a variety of reasons.

“I love what the honor guard stands for,” said team member Staff Sgt. Johnathon Brzek, “honor, pride and dignity. I like to think this team is the epitome of these values.”

Airman 1st Class CaMecia Bain enjoys the rewarding nature of the team's mission. “I do it because I like the feeling I get when we do a good job, and because we honor those airmen from the past and present,” she said.

The 19-person team includes representatives from the Air Force, Army and Navy, said Staff Sgt. Jerry Rabon, assistant team chief, who added work is under way to add host nation military members.

“The establishment of a combined honor guard is a step toward enhancing relations with our Portuguese counterparts,” Case said.

The combined team will perform at significant events such as the Community Appreciation Day and Annual Awards Banquet.

“This is the first time I've had the opportunity to be a member of an honor guard during my career,” said Petty Officer 1st Class Dianne Bennett, one of the team's Navy representatives. “It has given me a chance to be a part of a team that looks great and provides the community with a needed service.”

To join the honor guard call Rabon at 2-5011.
